Tel Aviv Appeals Committee delivered on April 14, 1983 (Case 1876).

The respondent had bought a plot and call this the basic cost of the property — the property in the time the plot had cost IL4,488 and the cost of building the house had been IL4,800. In 1981, he sold the house and the land for IL17,209, having expended IL377 on miscellanceus expenses.

The Land Betterment Tax Law of 1946 (hereafter "the Law") lays down that tax must be paid on the difference between the selling price of property, minus expenses, and the price at which it was criginally acquired. The rate of taxation varies in proportion with the passage of time which has elapsed between the acquisition and disposal of the property, a higher rate being demanded for a short lapse of time. In the present case, the problem arose as to what sum abould be regarded as the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house; in other words, whether the cost of building the house in other words, whether the cost of building the house in other words, whether the cost of building the house in other words, whether the cost of building the house in other words, whether the cost of building the house in other words, whether the cost of building the house in other words with the percent of the land, or the property in the property in the words of the property into two sections and the property i

An additional problem lies in the choice of products to which advertising time would be given. Since Israel's radio is Ratsocontrolled such products would have something of official seaction in the public mind and must therefore be chosen carefully. Dr. Burg said, The Minister added that he would favour the setting up of a public body to consider policy in this matter.

Minister's Office and the Ministry of Peets to examine the possibility of establishing commercial radio in this country according to Dr. Jessuh Burg. Minister of Poets.

Dr. Burg stated that he had been impressed with the stant and variety of radio broadcasts in the U.S. during his recent visit there. A similar development in this country, however, was hampered by the paucity of prospects of business competition.

comply with the provisions of the Law.

After an analysis of all three methods Justice concluded that the third method — adopted by the Appeals Committee — certainly did not come within the terms of the Law, and that the choice lay therefore between the first two methods. Of these two, the method of splitting the property into two sections gave a correct estimate of the profits made on the house and the land separately, whereas the first method — that of regarding the house as an expense in comsection with improvement — did not give a true picture, the halance being either weighted in favour of the taxpayer or against him, depending on the lapse of time between the acquisition and the disposal of the property.

disposal of the property.

It would appear, therefore,
Justice Witkon held, that the separative method was the most desirable one to be applied. He agreed however, with the respondent's Counsel, that this would cause endless complications, requiring property to be split into numerous units (for example, trees to be separated
from buildings, one building
from another, etc.) and resulting in calculations which would on occasion be well-nigh inpossible. He therefore had perferce, to cast the die in favour of the method propounded by Nor. Gluckman.

its great fighting performance,
although the visitors played better football.

Litvak, who scored the three
Rehevot goals, opened the soc;ing mid-way, in the first half.
Yeheskiel equalized from a rebounding free kick by Hasson

One of the Rehovot players, who
